A test case is considered ‘blocked’ if it cannot be run at the present time. This may be due to an error in another test which precludes the running of the blocked test case or an ambiguity or mistake in the way the blocked test was written.