

President's testing is a special type of testing that complies with very specific demands from executive management. An executive from a client company may insist that a specific test of his own design be passed before accepting a product, or may try to break the product on his own computer just before a ship date. These tests, however erratic, must be passed to ensure client satisfaction.