

Branding is the process by which a company creates its own brand by which its product will be identified by consumers. Often this is done by adding a skin, or wrapper, that changes the product's appearance and/or interface without adding to its functionality.